

Elecnor achieves CDP's highest rating in climate action, positioning itself among the global leaders in sustainability.

Elecnor is part of the select group of companies on CDP's "A List", which includes pioneering sustainability leaders both from Spain and internationally. Some examples of these companies are Iberdrola, Acciona, Telefónica, Microsoft, Apple, and Unilever.

Achieving an A rating for the first time reinforces Elecnor's leadership in sustainability, as well as its commitment to climate change adaptation and mitigation.

This milestone highlights Elecnor's excellence in climate action strategies, its alignment with a low-carbon economy, and its progress in reducing greenhouse gas emissions. The rating reflects the quality of the company's public disclosures, environmental leadership, and best practices in climate strategy and action, including science-based targets.

Being part of this ranking is a recognition of Elecnor's strong commitment to sustainability and strengthens the confidence of customers, investors, and shareholders, given that CDP is a renowned global non-profit organization with international prestige.

CDP evaluates and scores companies using a detailed and independent methodology, assigning grades from "A" to "D", aligned with the Task Force on Climate-Related Financial Disclosures (TCFD). CDP scores are used to guide investment decisions toward a sustainable, resilient, and net-zero carbon economy.
